Sample Written Examination

SAMPLE CORRECTIONAL OFFICER TEST

This is a sample test for the Correctional Officer classification. It is patterned after the actual Correctional Officer Written Examination. In order to pass the test, you must correctly answer 58 percent of the questions.

The following is a breakdown of the test components:

Questions 1 through 15:	Spelling, Punctuation and Grammar
Questions 16 through 25:	Reading Comprehension
Questions 26 through 40:	Basic Math Skills

Writing Correctional Officer Reports Using Correct Spelling, Punctuation and Grammar

If you are hired as a Correctional Officer, you will be required to write complete reports using correct spelling, punctuation and grammar. The following fifteen questions are meant to test your ability to identify errors in spelling, punctuation and grammar in sentences that appear in reports written by Correctional Officers.

Read each sentence and decide whether it has an error in spelling, punctuation, or grammar. Some sentences have no errors. (Do not consider capitalization when checking sentences for errors.) Select an answer for each sentence according to the following instructions.

If the error is in spelling, select Choice (A)

If the error is in grammar, select Choice (C)

If the error is in punctuation, select Choice (B)

If there is no error, select Choice (D)

TEST 2. -

Reading and Understanding Written Communication Similar to that Used by Correctional Officers

Correctional Officers are required to read and understand written information and to take action based upon what they have read. The next ten questions are designed to test your ability to understand what you read. Each problem consists of a paragraph and four statements based on the paragraph. You are to read each paragraph carefully. After you read the paragraph, examine the related instructions. Choose the one statement, which most accurately reflects what is said in the paragraph. Mark the corresponding letter to that statement on your answer sheet.

Sample Question

Prejudice is a product of unclear thinking. It means forming an opinion in advance, which is not based on knowledge, thought or reason. Some people do not know the rules of clear thinking. Those people make a habit of forming opinions without any facts. They assume that whatever they believe is true, just because they believe it. Their minds tend to be filled with nonsense (prejudiced beliefs) instead of real understanding.

Based only on the information in the paragraph directly above, people who are prejudiced tend to:

- (A) form biased opinions in spite of their understanding of the facts.
- (B) think their own beliefs are factual.
- (C) think clearly if all of the facts are presented to them.
- (D) never make any correct decisions.

Explanation

In the example, the best choice is (B), because (B) is the only statement fully supported by the paragraph above. The statement, "They assume whatever they believe is true..." is very similar in meaning to, "people who are prejudiced tend to think their own beliefs are factual". The words "true" and "factual" mean almost the same thing.

Choice (A) is incorrect because, according to the reading paragraph, prejudiced people do not know the facts. Therefore, they do not have an understanding of the facts.

Choice (C) is incorrect because the reading paragraph does not indicate whether or not prejudiced people will think clearly once all of the facts are presented to them.

Choice (D) is incorrect because the reading paragraph does not state that prejudiced people never make any correct decisions.
